

www.ZabanBook.com
زبان بوک

THE PORTRAIT OF A LADY

HENRY JAMES

EDITED BY ROBERT D. BAMBERG

A NORTON CRITICAL EDITION

SECOND EDITION

---

A NORTON CRITICAL EDITION

---

Henry James
THE PORTRAIT OF A LADY

---

AN AUTHORITATIVE TEXT
HENRY JAMES AND THE NOVEL
REVIEWS AND CRITICISM

SECOND EDITION

Edited by

ROBERT D. BAMBERG

KENT STATE UNIVERSITY

---

W • W • NORTON & COMPANY • New York • London

www.ZabanBook.com

زبان بوک

Contents

Preface	vii
The Text of The Portrait of a Lady	1
Preface to the New York Edition (1908)	3
The Portrait of a Lady	17
TEXTUAL APPENDIX	491
Textual Variants	495
F. O. Matthiessen • The Painter's Sponge and Varnish Bottle	577
Anthony J. Mazzella • The New Isabel	597
Nina Baym • Revision and Thematic Change in The Portrait of a Lady	620
Henry James and the Novel	635
From The Notebooks	639
From A Small Boy and Others	644
From Notes of a Son and Brother	646
From Italy Revisited	651
From A Roman Holiday	653
From Roman Rides	654
Contemporary Reviews and Criticism	657
CONTEMPORARY REVIEWS (1882)	661
W. C. Brownell • From The Nation	661
Horace E. Scudder • From The Atlantic Monthly	665
Anonymous • From Harper's	667
Margaret Oliphant • From Blackwood's	668
CRITICISM	677
Dorothy Van Ghent • On The Portrait of a Lady	677
William H. Gass • The High Brutality of Good Intentions	692

---

Preface

---

Although there is only one novel by Henry James called The Portrait of a Lady, we have what amounts to two separate "Portraits." The first appeared in 1880–81 and the other, with extensive retouching, was unveiled over a quarter century later in 1908. At first glance the two Portraits look pretty much alike despite James's more than five thousand substantive revisions ranging from single words to pages of text. James's view of his subject and deftness of touch was so sure that the changes did not substantially alter the outlines of the Portrait or its essential statement. But if the careful viewer is given the opportunity to inspect closely the myriads of brush strokes by which the Portrait was altered he will be startled by the differences and his vision of its statement strengthened. The first Portrait was drawn by a successful young author still in his thirties, pleased by the celebrity of "Daisy Miller," proud that The Portrait of a Lady would be his most important achievement to date, and triumphant in finding his subject and rendering it. By the time of the second Portrait, the Master, now in his sixties, had almost completed his artistic life's task and was in the process of collecting, revising, and prefacing his fiction for the "definitive" New York Edition, convinced that he could improve his writing in nearly every sentence and that nothing of his produced before 1890 "could come with any credit through the ordeal of a critical inspection."<sup>1</sup>

James conceived the outlines of the novel in 1878, according to Leon Edel, the author's foremost biographer.<sup>2</sup> In this year, he published "Daisy Miller;" he began his extensive critical study of Hawthorne; and his elder brother, the philosopher William James, was married. By the end of 1879, James was writing to the critical and somewhat domineering William, who had demanded greater "fatness and bigness" in Henry's stories: "I have determined that the novel I write this year shall be big."<sup>3</sup> Then, according to Edel, he seems to have set the "big" novel aside while he wrote Washington Square,<sup>4</sup> and when he travelled to Florence in 1880 he returned to writing it and took up the "old beginning, made

1. Theodora Bosanquet, "The Revised Version," The Little Review, 5 (August, 1918), p. 57.
2. Henry James, The Portrait of a Lady, ed. Leon Edel (New York, 1956), p. xvi.
3. Ralph Barton Perry, The Thought and Character of William James (Boston, 1935) I, 380. Also, Virginia Harlow, "Thomas Sergeant Perry and Henry James," Boston Public Library Quarterly, 1 (July, 1949) pp. 43–60.
4. Leon Edel, Henry James, The Conquest of London: 1870–1881 (Philadelphia, 1962), p. 397.

long before”<sup>5</sup> and worked intensely at it for over a year, even after he returned to London.<sup>6</sup> Before he was finished writing it, the novel began to appear in serial form in Macmillan’s Magazine (October, 1880) and one month later in America in The Atlantic Monthly, the serialization running concurrently in the two countries until November and December, 1881. In November, 1881, it was published in book form on the two continents but in separate editions.<sup>7</sup>

This Norton Critical Edition reprints the text of the revised New York Edition, but it also provides Textual Notes, which allow easy comparison of the revisions since passages from the 1881 edition are printed alongside equivalent revisions from the 1908 edition. In both versions, however, one is struck by the sense of urgency hovering over the narrator’s lightly ironic diction and leisurely syntax as he describes the inexorable resolution of Isabel’s fate. In the background of this portrait of a young woman seeking both freedom and fulfillment James has sketched a social picture as immediate for our times as it was a century ago. Great social changes are taking place Mr. Touchett reminds his auditors on the grassy lawn at Gardencourt, and he advises them to find a good woman, for after all, “the ladies will save us.” But neither the radical English lord nor the alienated intellectual nor the energetic American businessman is destined to marry the girl from Albany. Isabel Archer will affront her destiny by allying herself and her fortune with an expatriate dilettante who could never have anticipated this young American woman’s ferocious reaction to his desiccated conventionality. The elements of Isabel Archer’s characterization are as common today as they were valid yesterday: the relatively uneducated young woman of theoretic bent and high purpose, fearless but innocent; “a certain garden-like quality . . . which made her feel that introspection was, after all, an exercise in the open air, and that a visit to the recesses of one’s spirit was harmless when one returned from it with a lapful of roses;” the ambivalence toward money; the need to confuse instinctive drives with high moral purpose; the relative inability to take advice or to learn from the past; the outer alertness and the emerging capacity for inner awareness; the ability to live with one’s own mistakes and to reject the easy solutions; the stoic reaction to disappointed hope. Here, indeed, is a young woman in the process of discovering the difficulties of maintaining one’s “independence” while making a commitment to another person. A young woman becoming a lady under the greatest pressures.

A comparison of the two editions can offer the reader real guidance toward the elucidation of the author’s meaning, and this Norton Critical Edition includes three articles on the revisions. In recent years, critics

5. The Notebooks of Henry James, ed. F. O. Matthiessen and Kenneth B. Murdock (New York, 1947), p. 29.
6. Notebooks, pp. 29–31; Oscar Cargill, The Novels of Henry James (New York, 1961), pp. 78–119 (contains much factual information about the novel).
7. Leon Edel and Dan Laurence, A Bibliography of Henry James (London, 1961), pp. 52–53.

have focused increasingly on the revisions so as to arrive at a better understanding of the novel itself as well as James's development as a writer.

In addition, the section on "Henry James and the Novel" includes autobiographical information which has been excerpted from Henry James's own Notebooks, from his autobiographical writings, and from his travel books. All of this material is relevant to the subtle interrelationship which exists between the author and his works.

Finally, a work of literature need not stand independently of its audience or of the critical tradition surrounding it, and the Criticism section is intended to provide the reader with historical perspective. The four contemporary reviews which are reprinted, three of them from American magazines and one British, were all published in 1882 and give us some sense of the more perceptive responses to the first edition. The essays in Criticism, on the other hand, were all written within the past forty years and are all presumably based on readings of the 1908 edition. They are chosen to exhibit the characteristically broad variety of critical responses which began in the 1940's, with the resurgence of interest in James, and which have continued unabated until the present. The section entitled "Bibliographical Aids" is intended to help the reader select his way through the enormous body of material which has been written about Henry James.

For their cheerful and diligent aid in helping to prepare this edition, I wish to express my deep gratitude to Candy Ryan, Diane Blumenthal, Jane McVeigh, Cathy Gabale, Alexander Bartnicki, Michael Warren, and Paula J. Rosky. I also wish to thank the late John Benedict of W. W. Norton and Co., Inc., for his very careful editing and most useful suggestions.

ROBERT D. BAMBERG

---

The Text of
THE PORTRAIT OF A LADY

---

www.ZabanBook.com

زبان بوک

www.ZabanBook.com

زبان بوک

---

Preface to the New York Edition (1908)

---

“The Portrait of a Lady” was, like “Roderick Hudson,” begun in Florence, during three months spent there in the spring of 1879.<sup>1</sup> Like “Roderick” and like “The American,” it had been designed for publication in “The Atlantic Monthly,” where it began to appear in 1880. It differed from its two predecessors, however, in finding a course also open to it, from month to month, in “Macmillan’s Magazine”; which was to be for me one of the last occasions of simultaneous “serialisation” in the two countries that the changing conditions of literary intercourse between England and the United States had up to then left unaltered. It is a long novel, and I was long in writing it; I remember being again much occupied with it, the following year, during a stay of several weeks made in Venice. I had rooms on Riva Schiavoni, at the top of a house near the passage leading off to San Zaccaria; the waterside life, the wondrous lagoon spread before me, and the ceaseless human chatter of Venice came in at my windows, to which I seem to myself to have been constantly driven, in the fruitless fidget of composition, as if to see whether, out in the blue channel, the ship of some right suggestion, of some better phrase, of the next happy twist of my subject, the next true touch for my canvas, mightn’t come into sight. But I recall vividly enough that the response most elicited, in general, to these restless appeals was the rather grim admonition that romantic and historic sites, such as the land of Italy abounds in, offer the artist a questionable aid to concentration when they themselves are not to be the subject of it. They are too rich in their own life and too charged with their own meanings merely to help him out with a lame phrase; they draw him away from his small question to their own greater ones; so that, after a little, he feels, while thus yearning toward them in his difficulty, as if he were asking an army of glorious veterans to help him to arrest a peddler who has given him the wrong change.

There are pages of the book which, in the reading over, have seemed to make me see again the bristling curve of the wide Riva, the large colour-spots of the balconied houses and the repeated undulation of the little hunchbacked bridges, marked by the rise and drop again, with the wave, of foreshortened clicking pedestri-

1. The visit was actually in 1880.

ans. The Venetian footfall and the Venetian cry—all talk there, wherever uttered, having the pitch of a call across the water—come in once more at the window, renewing one's old impression of the delighted senses and the divided, frustrated mind. How can places that speak in general so to the imagination not give it, at the moment, the particular thing it wants? I recollect again and again, in beautiful places, dropping into that wonderment. The real truth is, I think, that they express, under this appeal, only too much—more than, in the given case, one has use for; so that one finds one's self working less congruously, after all, so far as the surrounding picture is concerned, than in presence of the moderate and the neutral, to which we may lend something of the light of our vision. Such a place as Venice is too proud for such charities; Venice doesn't borrow, she but all magnificently gives. We profit by that enormously, but to do so we must either be quite off duty or be on it in her service alone. Such, and so rueful, are these reminiscences; though on the whole, no doubt, one's book, and one's "literary effort" at large, were to be the better for them. Strangely fertilising, in the long run, does a wasted effort of attention often prove. It all depends on how the attention has been cheated, has been squandered. There are high-handed insolent frauds, and there are insidious sneaking ones. And there is, I fear, even on the most designing artist's part, always witless enough good faith, always anxious enough desire, to fail to guard him against their deceits.

Trying to recover here, for recognition, the germ of my idea, I see that it must have consisted not at all in any conceit of a "plot," nefarious name, in any flash, upon the fancy, of a set of relations, or in any one of those situations that, by a logic of their own, immediately fall, for the fabulist, into movement, into a march or a rush, a patter of quick steps; but altogether in the sense of a single character, the character and aspect of a particular engaging young woman, to which all the usual elements of a "subject," certainly of a setting, were to need to be super-added. Quite as interesting as the young woman herself, at her best, do I find, I must again repeat, this projection of memory upon the whole matter of the growth, in one's imagination, of some such apology for a motive. These are the fascinations of the fabulist's art, these lurking forces of expansion, these necessities of upspringing in the seed, these beautiful determinations, on the part of the idea entertained, to grow as tall as possible, to push into the light and the air and thickly flower there; and, quite as much, these fine possibilities of recovering, from some good standpoint on the ground gained, the intimate history of the business—of retracing and reconstructing its steps and stages. I have always fondly remembered a remark that I heard fall years ago from the lips of Ivan Turgenieff in regard to his own experience of the usual origin of the fictive picture. It began for him almost always with the vision of some person or persons, who hovered before him, soliciting him, as the active or passive figure, interesting him and appealing to him just as they were and by what they were. He saw them, in that fashion, as disponibles, saw them subject to the chances, the complications of existence, and saw them vividly, but then had to find for them the right relations, those that would most bring them out; to imagine, to invent and select and piece together the situations most useful and favourable to the sense of the creatures themselves, the complications they would be most likely to produce and to feel.

“To arrive at these things is to arrive at my ‘story,’” he said, “and that’s the way I look for it. The result is that I’m often accused of not having ‘story’ enough. I seem to myself to have as much as I need—to show my people, to exhibit their relations with each other; for that is all my measure. If I watch them long enough I see them come together, I see them placed, I see them engaged in this or that act and in this or that difficulty. How they look and move and speak and behave, always in the setting I have found for them, is my account of them—of which I dare say, alas, que cela manque souvent d’architecture. But I would rather, I think, have too little architecture than too much—when there’s danger of its interfering with my measure of the truth. The French of course like more of it than I give—having by their own genius such a hand for it; and indeed one must give all one can. As for the origin of one’s wind-blown germs themselves, who shall say, as you ask, where they come from? We have to go too far back, too far behind, to say. Isn’t it all we can say that they come from every quarter of heaven, that they are there at almost any turn of the road? They accumulate, and we are always picking them over, selecting among them. They are the breath of life—by which I mean that life, in its own way, breathes them upon us. They are so, in a manner prescribed and imposed—floated into our minds by the current of life. That reduces to imbecility the vain critic’s quarrel, so often, with one’s subject, when he hasn’t the wit to accept it. Will he point out then which other it should properly have been?—his office being, essentially to point out. Il en serait bien embarrassé. Ah, when he points out what I’ve done or failed to do with it, that’s another matter: there he’s on his ground. I give him up my ‘architecture,’” my distinguished friend concluded, “as much as he will.”

So this beautiful genius, and I recall with comfort the gratitude I drew from his reference to the intensity of suggestion that may reside in the stray figure, the unattached character, the image en disponibilité. It gave me higher warrant than I seemed then to have met for just that blest habit of one’s own imagination, the trick of investing some conceived or encountered individual, some brace or group of individuals, with the germinal property and authority. I was myself so much more antecedently conscious of my figures than of their setting—a too preliminary, a preferential interest in which struck me as in general such a putting of the cart before the horse. I might envy, though I couldn't emulate, the imaginative writer so constituted as to see his fable first and to make out its agents afterwards: I could think so little of any fable that didn't need its agents positively to launch it; I could think so little of any situation that didn't depend for its interest on the nature of the persons situated, and thereby on their way of taking it. There are methods of so-called presentation, I believe—among novelists who have appeared to flourish—that offer the situation as indifferent to that support; but I have not lost the sense of the value for me, at the time, of the admirable Russian's testimony to my not needing, all superstitiously, to try and perform any such gymnastic. Other echoes from the same source linger with me, I confess, as unfadingly—if it be not all indeed one much-embracing echo. It was impossible after that not to read, for one's uses, high lucidity into the tormented and disfigured and bemuddled question of the objective value, and even quite into that of the critical appreciation, of "subject" in the novel.

One had had from an early time, for that matter, the instinct of the right estimate of such values and of its reducing to the inane the dull dispute over the "immoral" subject and the moral. Recognising so promptly the one measure of the worth of a given subject, the question about it that, rightly answered, disposes of all others—is it valid, in a word, is it genuine, is it sincere, the result of some direct impression or perception of life?—I had found small edification, mostly, in a critical pretension that had neglected from the first all delimitation of ground and all definition of terms. The air of my earlier time shows, to memory, as darkened, all round, with that vanity—unless the difference to-day be just in one's own final impatience, the lapse of one's attention. There is, I think, no more nutritive or suggestive truth in this connexion than that of the perfect dependence of the "moral" sense of a work of art on the amount of felt life concerned in producing it. The question comes back thus, obviously, to the kind and the degree of the artist's prime sensibility, which is the soil out of which his subject springs. The quality and capacity of that soil, its ability to "grow" with due freshness and straightness any vision of life, represents, strongly or weakly, the projected morality. That element is but another name for the more or less close connexion of the subject with some mark made on the intelligence, with some sincere experience. By which, at the same time, of course, one is far from contending that this enveloping air of the artist's humanity—which gives the last touch to the worth of the work—is not a widely and wondrously varying element; being on one occasion a rich and magnificent medium and on another a comparatively poor and ungenerous one. Here we get exactly the high price of the novel as a literary form—its power not only, while preserving that form with closeness, to range through all the differences of the individual relation to its general subject-matter, all the varieties of outlook on life, of disposition to reflect and project, created by conditions that are never the same from man to man (or, so far as that goes, from man to woman), but positively to appear more true to its character in proportion as it strains, or tends to burst, with a latent extravagance, its mould.

The house of fiction has in short not one window, but a million—a number of possible windows not to be reckoned, rather; every one of which has been pierced, or is still pierceable, in its vast front, by the need of the individual vision and by the pressure of the individual will. These apertures, of dissimilar shape and size, hang so, all together, over the human scene that we might have expected of them a greater sameness of report than we find. They are but windows at the best, mere holes in a dead wall, disconnected, perched aloft; they are not hinged doors opening straight upon life. But they have this mark of their own that at each of them stands a figure with a pair of eyes, or at least with a field-glass, which forms, again and again, for observation, a unique instrument, insuring to the person making use of it an impression distinct from every other. He and his neighbours are watching the same show, but one seeing more where the other sees less, one seeing black where the other sees white, one seeing big where the other sees small, one seeing coarse where the other sees fine. And so on, and so on; there is fortunately no saying on what, for the particular pair of eyes, the window may not open; “fortunately” by reason, precisely, of this incalculability of range. The spreading field, the human scene, is the “choice of subject”; the pierced aperture, either broad or balconied or slit-like and low-browed, is the “literary form”; but they are, singly or together, as nothing without the posted presence of the watcher—without, in other words, the consciousness of the artist. Tell me what the artist is, and I will tell you of what he has been conscious. Thereby I shall express to you at once his boundless freedom and his “moral” reference.

All this is a long way round, however, for my word about my dim first move toward “The Portrait,” which was exactly my grasp of a single character—an acquisition I had made, moreover, after a fashion not here to be retraced. Enough that I was, as seemed to me, in complete possession of it, that I had been so for a long time, that this had made it familiar and yet had not blurred its charm, and that, all urgently, all tormentingly, I saw it in motion and, so to speak, in transit. This amounts to saying that I saw it as bent upon its fate—some fate or other; which, among the possibilities, being precisely the question. Thus I had my vivid individual—vivid, so strangely, in spite of being still at large, not confined by the conditions, not engaged in the tangle, to which we look for much of the impress that constitutes an identity. If the apparition was still all to be placed how came it to be vivid?—since we puzzle such quantities out, mostly, just by the business of placing them. One could answer such a question beautifully, doubtless, if one could do so subtle, if not so monstrous, a thing as to write the history of the growth of one's imagination. One would describe then what, at a given time, had extraordinarily happened to it, and one would so, for instance, be in a position to tell, with an approach to clearness, how, under favour of occasion, it had been able to take over (take over straight from life) such and such a constituted, animated figure or form. The figure has to that extent, as you see, been placed—placed in the imagination that detains it, preserves, protects, enjoys it, conscious of its presence in the dusky, crowded, heterogeneous back-shop of the mind very much as a wary dealer in precious odds and ends, competent to make an "advance" on rare objects confided to him, is conscious of the rare little "piece" left in deposit by the reduced, mysterious lady of title or the speculative amateur, and which is already there to disclose its merit afresh as soon as a key shall have clicked in a cupboard-door.

That may be, I recognise, a somewhat superfine analogy for the particular "value" I here speak of, the image of the young feminine nature that I had had for so considerable a time all curiously at my disposal; but it appears to fond memory quite to fit the fact—with the recall, in addition, of my pious desire but to place my treasure right. I quite remind myself thus of the dealer resigned not to "realise," resigned to keeping the precious object locked up indefinitely rather than commit it, at no matter what price, to vulgar hands. For there are dealers in these forms and figures and treasures capable of that refinement. The point is, however, that this single small corner-stone, the conception of a certain young woman affronting her destiny, had begun with being all my outfit for the large building of "The Portrait of a Lady." It came to be a square and spacious house—or has at least seemed so to me in this going over it again; but, such as it is, it had to be put up round my young woman while she stood there in perfect isolation. That is to me, artistically speaking, the circumstance of interest; for I have lost myself once more, I confess, in the curiosity of analysing the structure. By what process of logical accretion was this slight "personality," the mere slim shade of an intelligent but presumptuous girl, to find itself endowed with the high attributes of a Subject? —and indeed by what thinness, at the best, would such a subject not be vitiated? Millions of presumptuous girls, intelligent or not intelligent, daily affront their destiny, and what is it open to their destiny to be, at the most, that we should make an ado about it? The novel is of its very nature an “ado,” an ado about something, and the larger the form it takes the greater of course the ado. Therefore, consciously, that was what one was in for—for positively organising an ado about Isabel Archer.

One looked it well in the face, I seem to remember, this extravagance; and with the effect precisely of recognising the charm of the problem. Challenge any such problem with any intelligence, and you immediately see how full it is of substance; the wonder being, all the while, as we look at the world, how absolutely, how inordinately, the Isabel Archers, and even much smaller female fry, insist on mattering. George Eliot has admirably noted it—“In these frail vessels is borne onward through the ages the treasure of human affection.” In “Romeo and Juliet” Juliet has to be important, just as, in “Adam Bede” and “The Mill on the Floss” and “Middlemarch” and “Daniel Deronda,” Hetty Sorrel and Maggie Tulliver and Rosamond Vincy and Gwendolen Harleth have to be; with that much of firm ground, that much of bracing air, at the disposal all the while of their feet and their lungs. They are typical, none the less, of a class difficult, in the individual case, to make a centre of interest; so difficult in fact that many an expert painter, as for instance Dickens and Walter Scott, as for instance even, in the main, so subtle a hand as that of R. L. Stevenson, has preferred to leave the task unattempted. There are in fact writers as to whom we make out that their refuge from this is to assume it to be not worth their attempting; by which pusillanimity in truth their honour is scantily saved. It is never an attestation of a value, or even of our imperfect sense of one, it is never a tribute to any truth at all, that we shall represent that value badly. It never makes up, artistically, for an artist’s dim feeling about a thing that he shall “do” the thing as ill as possible. There are better ways than that, the best of all of which is to begin with less stupidity.

It may be answered meanwhile, in regard to Shakespeare’s and to George Eliot’s testimony, that their concession to the “importance” of their Juliets and Cleopatras and Portias (even with Portia as the very type and model of the young person intelligent and presumptuous) and to that of their Hettys and Maggies and Rosamonds and Gwendolens, suffers the abatement that these slimnesses are, when figuring as the main props of the theme, never suffered to be sole ministers of its appeal, but have their inadequacy eked out with comic relief and underplots, as the playwrights say, when not with murders and battles and the great mutations of the world. If they are shown as “mattering” as much as they could possibly pretend to, the proof of it is in a hundred other persons, made of much stouter stuff, and each involved moreover in a hundred relations which matter to them concomitantly with that one. Cleopatra matters, beyond bounds, to Antony, but his colleagues, his antagonists, the state of Rome and the impending battle also prodigiously matter; Portia matters to Antonio, and to Shylock, and to the Prince of Morocco, to the fifty aspiring princes, but for these gentry there are other lively concerns; for Antonio, notably, there are Shylock and Bassanio and his lost ventures and the extremity of his predicament. This extremity indeed, by the same token, matters to Portia—though its doing so becomes of interest all by the fact that Portia matters to us. That she does so, at any rate, and that almost everything comes round to it again, supports my contention as to this fine example of the value recognised in the mere young thing. (I say “mere” young thing because I guess that even Shakespeare, preoccupied mainly though he may have been with the passions of princes, would scarce have pretended to find the best of his appeal for her on her high social position.) It is an example exactly of the deep difficulty braved—the difficulty of making George Eliot’s “frail vessel,” if not the all-in-all for our attention, at least the clearest of the call.

Now to see deep difficulty braved is at any time, for the really addicted artist, to feel almost even as a pang the beautiful incentive, and to feel it verily in such sort as to wish the danger intensified. The difficulty most worth tackling can only be for him, in these conditions, the greatest the case permits of. So I remember feeling here (in presence, always, that is, of the particular uncertainty of my ground), that there would be one way better than another—oh, ever so much better than any other!—of making it fight out its battle. The frail vessel, that charged with George Eliot’s “treasure,” and thereby of such importance to those who curiously approach it, has likewise possibilities of importance to itself, possibilities which permit of treatment and in fact peculiarly require it from the moment they are considered at all. There is always the escape from any close account of the weak agent of such spells by using as a bridge for evasion, for retreat and flight, the view of her relation to those surrounding her. Make it predominantly a view of their relation and the trick is played: you give the general sense of her effect, and you give it, so far as the raising on it of a superstructure goes, with the maximum of ease. Well, I recall perfectly how little, in my now quite established connexion, the maximum of ease appealed to me, and how I seemed to get rid of it by an honest transposition of the weights in the two scales. “Place the centre of the subject in the young woman's own consciousness," I said to myself, "and you get as interesting and as beautiful a difficulty as you could wish. Stick to that—for the centre; put the heaviest weight into that scale, which will be so largely the scale of her relation to herself. Make her only interested enough, at the same time, in the things that are not herself, and this relation needn't fear to be too limited. Place meanwhile in the other scale the lighter weight (which is usually the one that tips the balance of interest): press least hard, in short, on the consciousness of your heroine's satellites, especially the male; make it an interest contributive only to the greater one. See, at all events, what can be done in this way. What better field could there be for a due ingenuity? The girl hovers, inextinguishable, as a charming creature, and the job will be to translate her into the highest terms of that formula, and as nearly as possible moreover into all of them. To depend upon her and her little concerns wholly to see you through will necessitate, remember, your really 'doing' her."

So far I reasoned, and it took nothing less than that technical rigour, I now easily see, to inspire me with the right confidence for erecting on such a plot of ground the neat and careful and proportioned pile of bricks that arches over it and that was thus to form, constructionally speaking, a literary monument. Such is the aspect that to-day "The Portrait" wears for me: a structure reared with an "architectural" competence, as Turgenieff would have said, that makes it, to the author's own sense, the most proportioned of his productions after "The Ambassadors"—which was to follow it so many years later and which has, no doubt, a superior roundness. On one thing I was determined; that, though I should clearly have to pile brick upon brick for the creation of an interest, I would leave no pretext for saying that anything is out of line, scale or perspective. I would build large—in fine embossed vaults and painted arches, as who should say, and yet never let it appear that the chequered pavement, the ground under the reader's feet, fails to stretch at every point to the base of the walls. That precautionary spirit, on re-perusal of the book, is the old note that most touches me: it testifies so, for my own ear, to the anxiety of my provision for the reader's amusement. I felt, in view of the possible limitations of my subject, that no such provision could be excessive, and the development of the latter was simply the general form of that earnest quest. And I find indeed that this is the only account I can give myself of the evolution of the fable: it is all under the head thus named that I conceive the needful accretion as having taken place, the right complications as having started. It was naturally of the essence that the young woman should be herself complex; that was rudimentary—or was at any rate the light in which Isabel Archer had originally dawned. It went, however, but a certain way, and other lights, contending, conflicting lights, and of as many different colours, if possible, as the rockets, the Roman candles and Catherine-wheels of a "pyrotechnic display," would be employable to attest that she was. I had, no doubt, a groping instinct for the right complications, since I am quite unable to track the footsteps of those that constitute, as the case stands, the general situation exhibited. They are there, for what they are worth, and as numerous as might be; but my memory, I confess, is a blank as to how and whence they came.

I seem to myself to have waked up one morning in possession of them—of Ralph Touchett and his parents, of Madame Merle, of Gilbert Osmond and his daughter and his sister, of Lord Warburton, Caspar Goodwood and Miss Stackpole, the definite array of contributions to Isabel Archer's history. I recognised them, I knew them, they were the numbered pieces of my puzzle, the concrete terms of my "plot." It was as if they had simply, by an impulse of their own, floated into my ken, and all in response to my primary question: "Well, what will she do?" Their answer seemed to be that if I would trust them they would show me; on which, with an urgent appeal to them to make it at least as interesting as they could, I trusted them. They were like the group of attendants and entertainers who come down by train when people in the country give a party; they represented the contract for carrying the party on. That was an excellent relation with them—a possible one even with so broken a reed (from her slightness of cohesion) as Henrietta Stackpole. It is a familiar truth to the novelist, at the strenuous hour, that, as certain elements in any work are of the essence, so others are only of the form; that as this or that character, this or that disposition of the material, belongs to the subject directly, so to speak, so this or that other belongs to it but indirectly—belongs intimately to the treatment. This is a truth, however, of which he rarely gets the benefit—since it could be assured to him, really, but by criticism based upon perception, criticism which is too little of this world. He must not think of benefits, moreover, I freely recognise, for that way dishonour lies: he has, that is, but one to think of—the benefit, whatever it may be, involved in his having cast a spell upon the simpler, the very simplest, forms of attention. This is all he is entitled to; he is entitled to nothing, he is bound to admit, that can come to him, from the reader, as a result on the latter's part of any act of reflexion or discrimination. He may enjoy this finer tribute—that is another affair, but on condition only of taking it as a gratuity "thrown in," a mere miraculous windfall, the fruit of a tree he may not pretend to have shaken. Against reflexion, against discrimination, in his interest, all earth and air conspire; wherefore it is that, as I say, he must in many a case have schooled himself, from the first, to work but for a "living wage." The living wage is the reader's grant of the least possible quantity of attention required for consciousness of a "spell." The occasional charming "tip" is an act of his intelligence over and beyond this, a golden apple, for the writer's lap, straight from the wind-stirred tree. The artist may of course, in wanton moods, dream of some Paradise (for art) where the direct appeal to the intelligence might be legalised; for to such extravagances as these his yearning mind can scarce hope ever completely to close itself. The most he can do is to remember they are extravagances.

All of which is perhaps but a gracefully devious way of saying that Henrietta Stackpole was a good example, in "The Portrait," of the truth to which I just adverted—as good an example as I could name were it not that Maria Gostrey, in "The Ambassadors," then in the bosom of time, may be mentioned as a better. Each of these persons is but wheels to the coach; neither belongs to the body of that vehicle, or is for a moment accommodated with a seat inside. There the subject alone is ensconced, in the form of its "hero and heroine," and the privileged high officials, say, who ride with the king and queen. There are reasons why one would have liked this to be felt, as in general one would like almost anything to be felt, in one's work, that one has one's self contributively felt. We have seen, however, how idle is that pretension, which I should be sorry to make too much of. Maria Gostrey and Miss Stackpole then are cases, each, of the light ficelle, not of the true agent; they may run beside the coach "for all they are worth," they may cling to it till they are out of breath (as poor Miss Stackpole all so visibly does), but neither, all the while, so much as gets her foot on the step, neither ceases for a moment to tread the dusty road. Put it even that they are like the fishwives who helped to bring back to Paris from Versailles, on that most ominous day of the first half of the French Revolution, the carriage of the royal family. The only thing is that I may well be asked, I acknowledge, why then, in the present fiction, I have suffered Henrietta (of whom we have indubitably too much) so officiously, so strangely, so almost inexplicably, to pervade. I will presently say what I can for that anomaly—and in the most conciliatory fashion.

A point I wish still more to make is that if my relation of confidence with the actors in my drama, who were, unlike Miss Stackpole, true agents, was an excellent one to have arrived at, there still remained my relation with the reader, which was another affair altogether and as to which I felt no one to be trusted but myself. That solicitude was to be accordingly expressed in the artful patience with which, as I have said, I piled brick upon brick. The bricks, for the whole counting-over—putting for bricks little touches and inventions and enhancements by the way—affect me in truth as well-nigh innumerable and as ever so scrupulously fitted together and packed-in. It is an effect of detail, of the minutest; though, if one were in this connexion to say all, one would express the hope that the general, the ampler air of the modest monument still survives. I do at least seem to catch the key to a part of this abundance of small anxious, ingenious illustration as I recollect putting my finger, in my young woman's interest, on the most obvious of her predicates. "What will she 'do'? Why, the first thing she'll do will be to come to Europe; which in fact will form, and all inevitably, no small part of her principal adventure. Coming to Europe is even for the 'frail vessels,' in this wonderful age, a mild adventure; but what is truer than that on one side—the side of their independence of flood and field, of the moving accident, of battle and murder and sudden death—her adventures are to be mild? Without her sense of them, her sense for them, as one may say, they are next to nothing at all; but isn't the beauty and the difficulty just in showing their mystic conversion by that sense, conversion into the stuff of drama or, even more delightful word still, of 'story'?" It was all as clear, my contention, as a silver bell. Two very good instances, I think, of this effect of conversion, two cases of the rare chemistry, are the pages in which Isabel, coming into the drawing-room at Garden-court, coming in from a wet walk or whatever, that rainy afternoon, finds Madame Merle in possession of the place, Madame Merle seated, all absorbed but all serene, at the piano, and deeply recognises, in the striking of such an hour, in the presence there, among the gathering shades, of this personage, of whom a moment before she had never so much as heard, a turning-point in her life. It is dreadful to have too much, for any artistic demonstration, to dot one's i's and insist on one's intentions, and I am not eager to do it now; but the question here was that of producing the maximum of intensity with the minimum of strain.

The interest was to be raised to its pitch and yet the elements to be kept in their key; so that, should the whole thing duly impress, I might show what an "exciting" inward life may do for the person leading it even while it remains perfectly normal. And I cannot think of a more consistent application of that ideal unless it be in the long statement, just beyond the middle of the book, of my young woman's extraordinary meditative vigil on the occasion that was to become for her such a landmark. Reduced to its essence, it is but the vigil of searching criticism; but it throws the action further forward than twenty "incidents" might have done. It was designed to have all the vivacity of incident and all the economy of picture. She sits up, by her dying fire, far into the night, under the spell of recognitions on which she finds the last sharpness suddenly wait. It is a representation simply of her motionlessly seeing, and an attempt withal to make the mere still lucidity of her act as “interesting” as the surprise of a caravan or the identification of a pirate. It represents, for that matter, one of the identifications dear to the novelist, and even indispensable to him; but it all goes on without her being approached by another person and without her leaving her chair. It is obviously the best thing in the book, but it is only a supreme illustration of the general plan. As to Henrietta, my apology for whom I just left incomplete, she exemplifies, I fear, in her superabundance, not an element of my plan, but only an excess of my zeal. So early was to begin my tendency to overtreat, rather than undertreat (when there was choice or danger) my subject. (Many members of my craft, I gather, are far from agreeing with me, but I have always held overtreating the minor disservice.) “Treating” that of “The Portrait” amounted to never forgetting, by any lapse, that the thing was under a special obligation to be amusing. There was the danger of the noted “thinness”—which was to be averted, tooth and nail, by cultivation of the lively. That is at least how I see it to-day. Henrietta must have been at that time a part of my wonderful notion of the lively. And then there was another matter. I had, within the few preceding years, come to live in London, and the “international” light lay, in those days, to my sense, thick and rich upon the scene. It was the light in which so much of the picture hung. But that is another matter. There is really too much to say.

HENRY JAMES.

---

Bibliographical Aids

---

The computerization of most college, university, and public library catalogs has made it relatively easy for students to generate their own bibliographies of general or special subjects or even specific topics. In addition, libraries now have the MLA International Bibliography, an index to journal articles, books, and book chapters. Bibliographies and checklists of the works of Henry James include Leon Edel and Dan Laurence, A Bibliography of Henry James (1961); Roger Gard, ed., Henry James: The Critical Heritage (1968); and Marion Richmond's "Henry James's The Portrait of a Lady: A Bibliography of Primary Material and Annotated Criticism," in The Henry James Review 7 (Winter-Spring 1986).

Selected Studies

Leon Edel's five-volume The Life of Henry James (1953–1972) remains the best biography; of special interest to students of The Portrait of a Lady is volume 2, The Conquest of London: 1870–1881 (1962). Also of much interest is Leon Edel's four-volume edition, Henry James's Letters (1974–1984). The Henry James Review, founded in 1979 and edited by Daniel Mark Fogel, is a good source for essays, book reviews, and current bibliographies. Useful for beginners who need to find their way among the voluminous writings about The Portrait of a Lady are selected collections of essays on the novel, including the First Edition of this Norton Critical Edition (1975). Also see Joel Porte, ed., New Essays on The Portrait of a Lady (1990); Harold Bloom, ed., Henry James's The Portrait of a Lady (1987); Daniel Mark Fogel, ed., New Essays on The Portrait of a Lady, The Henry James Review 7 (1986); Lyall H. Powers, ed., Merrill Studies in The Portrait of a Lady (1970); Peter Buitenhuis, ed., Twentieth Century Interpretations of The Portrait of a Lady (1968); and William T. Stafford, ed., Perspectives on James's The Portrait of a Lady (1970). For an overall examination of James's revisions of his texts, see Philip Home, Henry James and Revision: The New York Edition (1990). General book-length studies of James that include material on The Portrait of a Lady are: Quentin Anderson, The American Henry James (1957); Louis Auchincloss, Reading Henry James (1975); Martha Banta, Henry James and the Occult: The Great Extension (1972); Joseph Warren Beach, The Method of Henry James (1918); Millicent Bell, Meaning in Henry James (1991); Alwyn Berland, Culture and Conduct in the Novels of Henry James (1981); Edwin T. Bowden, The Themes of Henry James: A System of Observation through the Visual Arts (1956); Peter Buitenhuis, The Grasping Imagination: The American Writings of Henry James (1970); Oscar Cargill, The Novels of Henry James (1961); Richard Chase, The American Novel and Its Tradition (1957); Frederick W. Dupee, Henry James (1951); Virginia C. Fowler, Henry James's American Girl: The Embroidery on the Canvas (1984); Judith Fryer, The Faces of Eve: Women in the Nineteenth-Century American Novel (1976); Robert L. Gale, The Caught Image: Figurative Language in the Fiction of Henry James (1964); Richard Gill, Happy Rural Seat: The English Country House and the Literary Imagination (1972); Laurence B. Holland, The Expense of Vision: Essays on the Craft of Henry James (1972); A. N. Kaul, The Action of English Comedy: Studies in the Encounter of Abstraction and Experience from Shakespeare to Shaw (1970); Arnold Kettle, Henry James's Major Novels: Essays in Criticism (1953); Dorothea Krook, The Ordeal of Consciousness in Henry James (1962); F. R. Leavis, The Great Tradition (1948); Naomi Lebowitz, The Imagination of Loving: Henry James's Legacy to the Novel (1965); Robert Long, The Great Succession: Henry James and the Legacy of Hawthorne (1979); F. O. Matthiessen, Henry James: The Major Phase (1944); Donald Mull, Henry James's "Sublime Economy": Money as Symbolic Center in the Fiction (1973); Richard Poirier, The Comic Sense of Henry James: A Study of the Early Novels (1966); Lyall H. Powers, Henry James: An Introduction and Interpretation (1970); S. Gorley Putt, Henry James: A Reader's Guide (1966); Ora Segal, The Lucid Reflector: The Observer in Henry James's Fiction (1969); Dorothy Van Ghent, The English Novel: Form and Function (1953); William Veeder, Henry James: The Lessons of the Master: Popular Fiction and Personal Style in the Nineteenth Century (1975); Philip M. Weinstein, Henry James and the Requirements of the Imagination (1971); and Viola Hopkins Winner, Henry James and the Visual Arts (1970).

---

Norton Critical Editions

---

- ANDERSON—Winesburg, Ohio—edited by Charles E. Modlin and Ray Lewis White
- AQUINAS—St. Thomas Aquinas on Politics and Ethics—translated and edited by Paul E. Sigmund
- AUSTEN—Emma—edited by Stephen M. Parrish—Second Edition
- AUSTEN—Pride and Prejudice—edited by Donald Gray—Second Edition
- BEHN—Oroonoko—edited by Joanna Lipking
- Beowulf*—(the Donaldson translation)—edited by Joseph F. Tuso
- BLAKE—Blake's Poetry and Designs—selected and edited by Mary Lynn Johnson and John E. Grant
- BOCCACCIO—The Decameron—selected, translated, and edited by Mark Musa and Peter E. Bondanella
- BRONTË, CHARLOTTE—Jane Eyre—edited by Richard J. Dunn—Second Edition
- BRONTË, EMILY—Wuthering Heights—edited by William M. Sale, Jr., and Richard Dunn—Third Edition
- BROWNING, ELIZABETH BARRETT—Aurora Leigh—edited by Margaret Reynolds
- BROWNING, ROBERT—Browning's Poetry—selected and edited by James F. Loucks
- BYRON—Byron's Poetry—selected and edited by Frank D. McConnell
- CARROLL—Alice in Wonderland—edited by Donald J. Gray—Second Edition
- CERVANTES—Don Quixote—(the Ormsby translation, revised)—edited by Joseph R. Jones and Kenneth Douglas
- CHAUCER—The Canterbury Tales: Nine Tales and the General Prologue—edited by V. A. Kolve and Glending Olson
- CHEKHOV—Anton Chekhov's Plays—translated and edited by Eugene K. Bristow
- CHEKHOV—Anton Chekhov's Short Stories—selected and edited by Ralph E. Matlaw
- CHOPIN—The Awakening—edited by Margo Culley—Second Edition
- CLEMENS—Adventures of Huckleberry Finn—edited by Sculley Bradley, Richmond Croom Beatty, E. Hudson Long, and Thomas Cooley—Second Edition
- CLEMENS—A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court—edited by Allison R. Ensor
- CLEMENS—Pudd'nhead Wilson and Those Extraordinary Twins—edited by Sidney E. Berger
- CONRAD—Heart of Darkness—edited by Robert Kimbrough—Third Edition
- CONRAD—Lord Jim—edited by Thomas C. Moser—Second Edition
- CONRAD—The Nigger of the "Narcissus"—edited by Robert Kimbrough
- CRANE—Maggie: A Girl of the Streets—edited by Thomas A. Gullason

CRANE—The Red Badge of Courage—edited by Donald Pizer—Third Edition
 DARWIN—Darwin—selected and edited by Philip Appleman—Second Edition
 DEFOE—A Journal of the Plague Year—edited by Paula R. Backscheider
 DEFOE—Moll Flanders—edited by Edward Kelly
 DEFOE—Robinson Crusoe—edited by Michael Shinagel—Second Edition
 DE PIZAN—The Selected Writings of Christine de Pizan—translated by Kevin Brownlee and Renate Blumenfeld-Kosinski, edited by Renate
 Blumenfeld-Kosinski
 DICKENS—Bleak House—edited by George Ford and Sylvère Monod
 DICKENS—David Copperfield—edited by Jerome H. Buckley
 DICKENS—Hard Times—edited by George Ford and Sylvère Monod—Second Edition
 DICKENS—Oliver Twist—edited by Fred Kaplan
 DONNE—John Donne's Poetry—selected and edited by Arthur L. Clements—
Second Edition
 DOSTOEVSKY—The Brothers Karamazov—(the Garnett translation)—edited by Ralph E. Matlaw
 DOSTOEVSKY—Crime and Punishment—(the Coulson translation)—edited by George Gibian—Third Edition
 DOSTOEVSKY—Notes from Underground—translated and edited by Michael
 R. Katz
 DOUGLASS—Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass, an American Slave, Written by Himself—edited by William L. Andrews and William S.
 McFeely
 DREISER—Sister Carrie—edited by Donald Pizer—Second Edition
Eight Modern Plays—edited by Anthony Caputi
 ELIOT—Middlemarch—edited by Bert G. Hornback
 ELIOT—The Mill on the Floss—edited by Carol T. Christ
 ERASMUS—The Praise of Folly and Other Writings—translated and edited by Robert M. Adams
 FAULKNER—The Sound and the Fury—edited by David Minter—*Second
 Edition*
 FIELDING—Joseph Andrews with Shamela and Related Writings—edited by Homer Goldberg
 FIELDING—Tom Jones—edited by Sheridan Baker—Second Edition
 FLAUBERT—Madame Bovary—edited with a substantially new translation by Paul de Man
 FORD—The Good Soldier—edited by Martin Stannard
 FRANKLIN—Benjamin Franklin's Autobiography—edited by J. A. Leo Lemay
 and P. M. Zall
 GOETHE—Faust—translated by Walter Arndt, edited by Cyrus Hamlin
 GOGOL—Dead Souls—(the Reavey translation)—edited by George Gibian
 HARDY—Far from the Madding Crowd—edited by Robert C. Schweik
 HARDY—Jude the Obscure—edited by Norman Page
 HARDY—The Mayor of Casterbridge—edited by James K. Robinson
 HARDY—The Return of the Native—edited by James Gindin
 HARDY—Tess of the d'Urbervilles—edited by Scott Elledge—Third Edition
 HAWTHORNE—The Blithedale Romance—edited by Seymour Gross and Rosalie
 Murphy
 HAWTHORNE—The House of the Seven Gables—edited by Seymour Gross
 HAWTHORNE—Nathaniel Hawthorne's Tales—edited by James McIntosh
 HAWTHORNE—The Scarlet Letter—edited by Seymour Gross, Sculley

Bradley, Richmond Croom Beatty, and E. Hudson Long—Third Edition
 HERBERT—George Herbert and the Seventeenth-Century Religious Poets—selected and edited by Mario A. DiCesare
 HERODOTUS—The Histories—translated and selected by Walter E. Blanco, edited by Walter E. Blanco and Jennifer Roberts
 HOBBS—Leviathan—edited by Richard E. Flathman and David Johnston
 HOMER—The Odyssey—translated and edited by Albert Cook—Second Edition
 HOWELLS—The Rise of Silas Lapham—edited by Don L. Cook
 IBSEN—The Wild Duck—translated and edited by Dounia B. Christiani
 JAMES—The Ambassadors—edited by S. P. Rosenbaum—Second Edition
 JAMES—The American—edited by James W. Tuttleton
 JAMES—The Portrait of a Lady—edited by Robert D. Bamberg—Second Edition
 JAMES—Tales of Henry James—edited by Christof Wegelin
 JAMES—The Turn of the Screw—edited by Robert Kimbrough
 JAMES—The Wings of the Dove—edited by J. Donald Crowley and Richard A. Hocks
 JONSON—Ben Jonson and the Cavalier Poets—selected and edited by Hugh Maclean
 JONSON—Ben Jonson's Plays and Masques—selected and edited by Robert M. Adams
 KAFKA—The Metamorphosis—translated and edited by Stanley Corngold
 LAFAYETTE—The Princess of Clèves—edited and with a revised translation by John D. Lyons MACHIAVELLI—The Prince—translated and edited by Robert M. Adams—Second Edition
 MALTHUS—An Essay on the Principle of Population—edited by Philip Appleman
 MANN—Death in Venice—translated and edited by Clayton Koelb
 MARX—The Communist Manifesto—edited by Frederic L. Bender
 MELVILLE—The Confidence-Man—edited by Hershel Parker
 MELVILLE—Moby-Dick—edited by Harrison Hayford and Hershel Parker
 MEREDITH—The Egoist—edited by Robert M. Adams
Middle English Lyrics—selected and edited by Maxwell S. Luria and Richard L. Hoffman
Middle English Romances—selected and edited by Stephen H. A. Shepherd
 MILL—Mill—edited by Alan Ryan
 MILTON—Paradise Lost—edited by Scott Elledge—Second Edition
Modern Irish Drama—edited by John P. Harrington
 MORE—Utopia—translated and edited by Robert M. Adams—Second Edition
 NEWMAN—Apologia Pro Vita Sua—edited by David J. DeLaura
 NEWTON—Newton—edited by I. Bernard Cohen and Richard S. Westfall
 NORRIS—McTeague—edited by Donald Pizer—Second Edition
Restoration and Eighteenth-Century Comedy—edited by Scott McMillan—Second Edition
 RICH—Adrienne Rich's Poetry and Prose—edited by Barbara Charlesworth Gelpi and Albert Gelpi
 ROUSSEAU—Rousseau's Political Writings—edited by Alan Ritter and translated by Julia Conaway Bondanella
 ST. PAUL—The Writings of St. Paul—edited by Wayne A. Meeks
 SHAKESPEARE—Hamlet—edited by Cyrus Hoy—Second Edition

- SHAKESPEARE—Henry IV, Part I—edited by James L. Sanderson—Second Edition
- SHAW—Bernard Shaw's Plays—edited by Warren Sylvester Smith
- SHELLEY, MARY—Frankenstein—edited by J. Paul Hunter
- SHELLEY, PERCY—Shelley's Poetry and Prose—selected and edited by Donald H. Reiman and Sharon B. Powers
- SMOLLETT—Humphry Clinker—edited by James L. Thorson
- SOPHOCLES—Oedipus Tyrannus—translated and edited by Luci Berkowitz and Theodore F. Brunner
- SPENSER—Edmund Spenser's Poetry—selected and edited by Hugh Maclean and Anne Lake Prescott—Third Edition
- STENDHAL—Red and Black—translated and edited by Robert M. Adams
- STERNE—Tristram Shandy—edited by Howard Anderson
- STOKER—Dracula—edited by Nina Auerbach and David J. Skal
- STOWE—Uncle Tom's Cabin—edited by Elizabeth Ammons
- SWIFT—Gulliver's Travels—edited by Robert A. Greenberg—Second Edition
- SWIFT—The Writings of Jonathan Swift—edited by Robert A. Greenberg and William B. Piper
- TENNYSON—In Memoriam—edited by Robert H. Ross
- TENNYSON—Tennyson's Poetry—selected and edited by Robert W. Hill, Jr.
- THACKERAY—Vanity Fair—edited by Peter Shillingsburg
- THOREAU—Walden and Resistance to Civil Government—edited by William Rossi—Second Edition
- TOLSTOY—Anna Karenina—(the Maude translation)—edited by George Gibian—Second Edition
- TOLSTOY—Tolstoy's Short Fiction—edited and with revised translations by Michael R. Katz
- TOLSTOY—War and Peace—(the Maude translation)—edited by George Gibian—Second Edition
- TOOMER—Cane—edited by Darwin T. Turner
- TURGENEV—Fathers and Sons—translated and edited by Michael R. Katz
- VOLTAIRE—Candide—translated and edited by Robert M. Adams—Second Edition
- WASHINGTON—Up From Slavery—edited by William L. Andrews
- WATSON—The Double Helix: A Personal Account of the Discovery of the Structure of DNA—edited by Gunther S. Stent
- WHARTON—Ethan Frome—edited by Cynthia Griffin Wolff and Kristen O. Lauer
- WHARTON—The House of Mirth—edited by Elizabeth Ammons
- WHITMAN—Leaves of Grass—edited by Sculley Bradley and Harold W. Blodgett
- WILDE—The Picture of Dorian Gray—edited by Donald L. Lawler
- WOLLSTONECRAFT—A Vindication of the Rights of Woman—edited by Carol H. Poston—Second Edition
- WORDSWORTH—The Prelude: 1799, 1805, 1850—edited by Jonathan Wordsworth, M. H. Abrams, and Stephen Gill

THE PORTRAIT OF A LADY

This Second Norton Critical Edition of one of Henry James's most important novels is that of the New York Edition (1908). In a sense, there are two distinctly separate Portraits—the 1880–81 first edition and the New York edition, which James extensively revised. The editor has meticulously prepared a list of textual variants, enabling comparative reading of the novel. Nina Baym, F. O. Matthiessen, and Anthony J. Mazzella provide differing perspectives on James's revision process.

"Henry James and the Novel" culls autobiographical excerpts from James's other writings—his Notebooks; the intentionally autobiographical A Small Boy and Others and Notes of a Son and Brother; and the travel books Italy Revised, A Roman Holiday, and Roman Rides.

"Contemporary Reviews and Criticism" provides both chronological and critical perspective on The Portrait of a Lady. Four reviews from 1882 outline the novel's initial critical reception. Seven important essays from the period 1954–91 provide varied critical responses by Dorothy Van Ghent, William H. Gass, Laurence B. Holland, Charles Feidelson, Louis Auchincloss, William Veeder, and Millicent Bell.

"Biographical Aids" includes judiciously chosen secondary works on James from the wealth of material published yearly.

COVER ILLUSTRATION: The Mirror (1890) by Dennis Miller Bunker. Reproduced by permission of the Daniel J. Terra Collection, Terra Museum of American Art.

www.ZabanBook.com

زبان بوک

ISBN 978-0-393-96646-6

9 780393 966466

W. W. NORTON
NEW YORK LONDON

